International Hungarian Military History
Preservation Society is $40.00 annually,

The original Magyar Front was the weekly newspaper of the Frontline Fighter's Association, and was published from the early 1930s until the end of the Second World War.

A note from the Editor

I became interested in military history at a very early age, and I've been a collector ever since then. I must have read every book on the subject in my elementary and high school libraries, and my pocket money was spent exclusively on military books and anything related in the local junk and surplus stores - by the time I became a grown-up I could boast having a pretty respectable militaria collection.

I returned to Hungary for the first time as an adult in 1995, and while browsing through a Budapest antique book shop I found a copy of the Frontline Fighters' Association almanac entitled Magyar Frontharcos Mozgalom (Hungarian Frontline Fighters' Movement). Even though I had 25 years of experience with militaria at that time, I had never seen anything like it - I had never even heard of such an organization.

It was very poignant for me, to think about how I grew up in a world of Hungarian immigrants, and I had focussed my interests on military history; yet such a significant part of history had eluded me. Later, I realized that I wasn't alone - I doubt very many Hungarians today have any idea of the existence of the 300,000 member strong Frontline Fighters' Association. During some soul-searching I decided to focus on this little slice of Hungarian history in the hope that I would raise awareness of it, and as a by-product make my hobby of collecting more interesting.

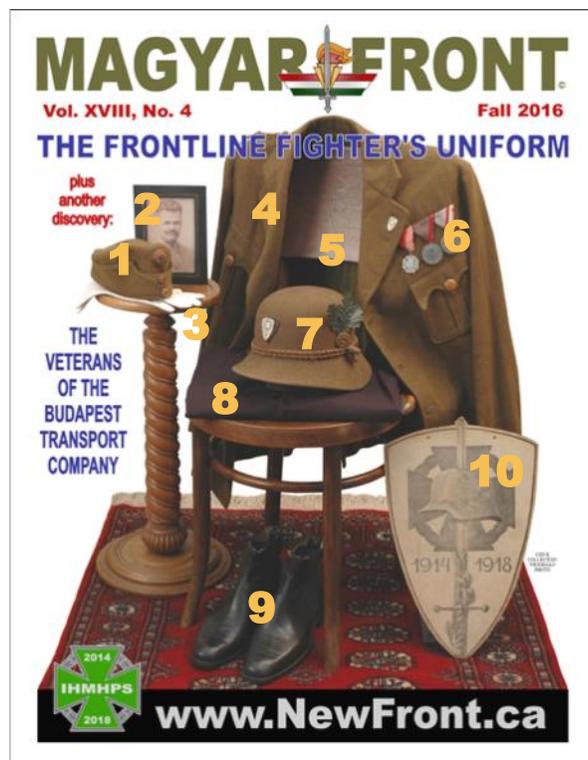

The 2014-2018 First World War centenary has given me a good reason to present more of my collection and historical data through the Magyar Front, which I hope you are all enjoying. My goal is to make ignorance of the Hungarian veteran's movement a rarity rather than the norm, and I hope that my work will inspire others to concentrate their efforts on something that they hold dear - not only does it make one's hobby or vocation more intensely interesting, delving head first into an obscure subject can yield important discoveries.

This issue concentrates on the main components of the Frontline Fighters' Association uniform, and the accompanying article presents some new information I have uncovered about the uniform (specifically the headgear) of the veterans who worked for the BSzKRt, or Budapest Székesfővárosi Közlekedési Részvénytársaság (Budapest Transport Company).

I am very pleased to be able to occasionally discover new pieces of the historical puzzle, and I am convinced that anyone with a bit of perseverance can do so as well, keeping in mind the words of Arthur Conan Doyle: "One smallest new fact obtained in the laboratory, one brick built into the temple of science, far outweighs any second-hand exposition which passes an idle hour, but can leave no useful result behind it." P.Cz.

The Frontline Fighters' Uniform

by Peter Czink

Photography by Lorraine Weideman

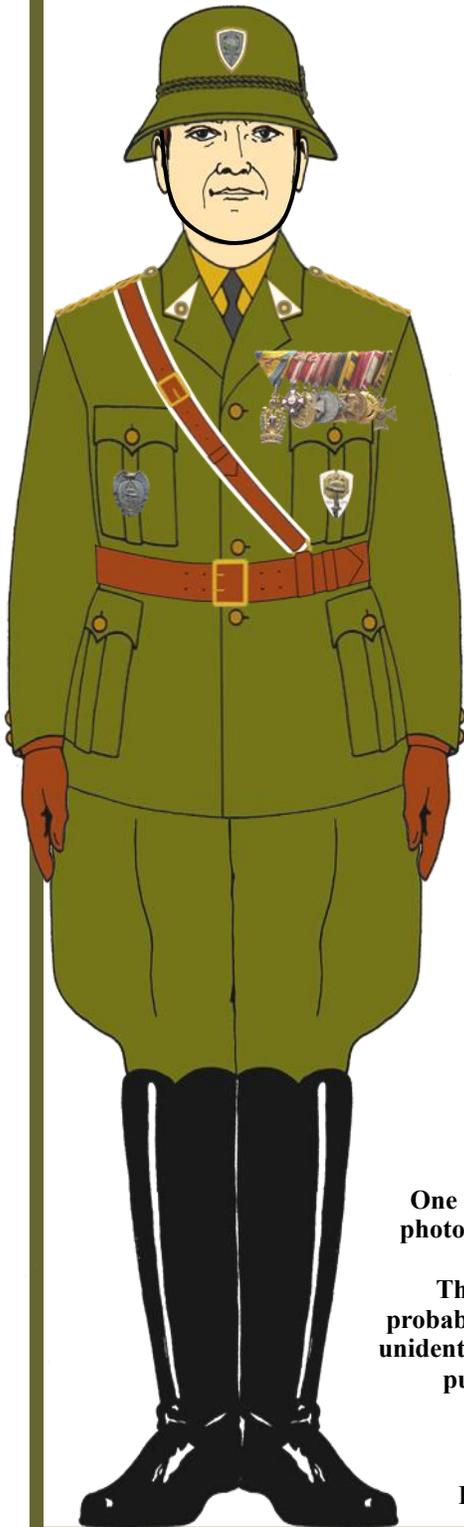

Period tailor's pattern for the Frontline Fighters' Association uniform.

Although we encounter small variations among the clothing of any paramilitary organization, the Hungarian Frontline Fighters' Association uniforms were remarkably well standardized. A few simple garments made up their uniform – the tunic, two types of trousers, and a greatcoat. Headgear has been covered in previous issues of the Magyar Front (field caps in the Fall of 2014, and the felt helmet in the Summer 2009 issue).

 Fighters' Association uniforms, "all types of equipment, medals and ribbons."

Below: Private Ferenc Kemences's uniform tunic, made from good quality, heavy wool, lined with dark green cotton. Each of the cuffs have two buttons and the pocket flaps are dramatically scalloped. This jacket has a single rear vent and carries the single (for members not in positions of leadership) green shoulder cord signifying his former rank as a private. The membership pin on his lapel is the less-expensive non-enamelled version. There are no manufacturer's labels to be found, which is not unusual - this simple garment could be easily made by any local tailor. All regular members were required to have green coloured backing on the cross strap of their Sam Browne belt. This man was awarded the Emperor's Troops' Cross, the Medal for the Wounded, and the Hungarian World War I Commemorative Medal with swords and helmet.

The main component of the Frontharcos uniform was the tunic. An early article in the original Magyar Front (1934.III.1.) describes it as "...a khaki tunic of gabardine or wool, with four buttons." The open-collar tunics (a modern look at that time) were made from a greener material than the Hungarian army uniforms of the day, and ones made from gabardine were a much more expensive option. Four patch pockets were regulation, most of which having the traditional scalloped pocket flaps, however, ones with straight flaps are also encountered.

Four 20mm to 25mm caramel-brown synthetic "bone buttons" (csontgombok) closed the front of the tunic and one fastened each pocket; while two or three 15mm buttons decorated the cuff of each sleeve. Rank insignia was displayed on one or both shoulders, and are covered in detail in the Summer 2014 issue of the Magyar Front. The Frontline Fighters' Association membership pin (see the Spring 2009 issue of the Magyar Front) was worn at all times on the left lapel.

There were two options for pants – straight black trousers or breeches made from the same material as the tunic. According to regulations printed in the 1942 edition of the association's almanac (Frontharcos Évkönyv), if the majority of a chapter's members predominately wore boots in civilian life (for work and dress occasions), then that chapter should all wear boots. If the majority are used to wearing trousers, then they should wear trousers. Especially in rural Hungary, traditional high leather boots were an integral part of a man's dress clothing, so these rules were also based on economy as well as fashion. These regulations were not carved in stone, however, and it's very clear that many members chose to wear the boots and breeches for a more martial look.

The third major component of the uniform was the greatcoat. The same 1934 article states that is should be "made in the same style as the military version," but traditional military coloured piping and collar tabs were forbidden (although the association's leadership later wore their rank insignia on the greatcoat as well). Also stipulated is that members who wear gold shoulder-cords (former officers) should have velvet collars on their greatcoats (in a slightly contrasting shade of khaki-green – velvet collars traditionally decorated officer's greatcoats).

The pocket flaps are slightly scalloped, there is no rear vent, and the cuffs each have two buttons. One cord is on the right shoulder (silver for his former NCO status) and the green-backed cross-strap identifies him as a regular member. The Parade Badge in Bronze (sometimes referred to as the association's Bronze Merit Medal) is worn on the right pocket, while the first type Badge of Honour is on the left one. His medals are: the Silver Bravery Medal II class (awarded twice), the Bronze Bravery Medal, the Iron Cross of Merit with Crown on war ribbon, the Iron Cross of Merit on war ribbon, the Emperor's Troops' Cross, the Medal for the Wounded, the Hungarian World War I Commemorative Medal with swords and helmet, the Other Ranks' Service Cross, III class -awarded after six years of service, the 1912-1913 Mobilization Cross, and the Austrian WWI Commemorative Medal with swords.

The most important accessory worn with the Frontharcos uniform was the leather belt and cross strap, which was worn on all occasions. The cross strap was used to indicate the wearer's position within the organisation – white underlay was for the national leadership and lifetime members; red underlay denoted local leadership for the duration of their term in office; green underlay was for regular members; and cornflower blue underlay was reserved for Új Front (New Front) members.

The 1934 Magyar Front uniform article mentions that coloured underlay was also meant to distinguish Frontline Fighters' Association members from regular Armed Forces personnel and other official Hungarian organizations who wore similar belts and cross-straps.

Originally, a white shirt with a stiff collar was prescribed for wear with the uniform, however, an article from the 1938.V.20. edition of the Magyar Front brings up a concern from some members of rural chapters who were finding such formal shirts to be too expensive and difficult to maintain in presentable condition. It was because of this that the national leadership recommended that a "Scout style" khaki shirt with a soft collar could be worn instead of the white one (by 1942, only the khaki shirt is mentioned in uniform regulations).

A black necktie, black socks and black shoes (or boots) were official, and gloves also were a part of the ensemble: "greenish-brown" ones with breeches, and cream coloured leather or suede gloves were to be worn with the black trousers.

Although it was relatively simple in design, the whole outfit, complete with the unique felt helmet, hold a distinctive and historically significant place in the realm of Hungarian uniformology.

PRIVATE COLLECTION

Above: The president of the Frontline Fighters' Association Count József v. Takách-Tolvay in 1938. He wears the regulation greatcoat with the contrasting velvet collar as prescribed for former officers, and has chosen to wear his rank insignia on his greatcoat as well. The cut of the greatcoat is that of the regular Hungarian army type - double breasted with two rows of six buttons and deep turned-back cuffs. Many period photographs show men wearing their medals on the greatcoat. Along with the rest of the uniformed veterans at this event in Komárom, he also wears the blue armband with a printed frontline Fighters' Association emblem and the Hungarian national colours (see opposite page).

Also shown on the opposite page is a 1942 ad for the Budapest firm of Rózsa, which specialized in uniforms and decorations. A worker would earn around 120 to 150 pengő at that time - here we can see the price difference between a plain wool uniform tunic at 39.50 and an officer's fine quality gabardine version for 90 pengő.

Below: The uniform tunic of an unidentified NCO (note the single silver shoulder cord). Made from high quality wool, it's partially lined with green cotton material. Three buttons are on each cuff and there is no rear vent, while the pocket flaps are only somewhat scalloped. We can immediately see that this individual held a temporary position of leadership by the red cross-strap backing. A red-wool backed Silver Parade Badge is worn on the right pocket while the badge of the Order of the Valliant is on the left. His medal group consists of the First Class Silver Bravery Medal, the Second Class Silver Bravery Medal (awarded three times) the Emperor's Troops' Cross, the Medal for the Wounded (with four stripes), and the Hungarian World War I Commemorative Medal with swords and helmet.

Unfortunately no documentation regarding the armband (detail shown above) has been found to date, however, photographic evidence clearly shows it being worn by large groups of veterans taking part in early organized events. My theory is that its purpose was to further distinguish members from the Frontline Fighters' Association from Hungarian Armed Forces personnel.

Below: A very unusual tunic variant which belonged to an unidentified NCO. The pocket flaps are traditionally scalloped and there are two rear vents. Each cuff has two buttons, it's unlined and made of coarse wool, and has been repaired and modified. It is quite well-worn and the entire collar has been replaced. It's likely that this was done by a second owner, as a second-hand garment would have saved a man of modest means considerable money - the button positions have also been drastically altered. A Bronze Parade Badge on his right pocket accompany his medals: the First and Second Class Silver Bravery Medals, the Bronze Bravery Medal (awarded three times), the Emperor's Troops' Cross, the Medal for the Wounded (with three stripes), the Hungarian World War I Commemorative Medal with swords and helmet, and the Austrian World War I Commemorative Medal with swords.

The braided lanyard hanging from the right shoulder-cord button is occasionally encountered on Frontline Fighters' Association uniforms. Often, the tunic also features chevron-shaped collar insignia.

To date, no written documentation on these accoutrements has been found. In the 1930s and 1940s fraternal paramilitary "rifle associations" existed in Hungary, some of which were directly affiliated with the Frontline Fighters' Association (to the point of sharing special insignia - see the Magyar Front, volume IX, issue 4). This could very well be a marksmanship lanyard or simply an insignia meant to establish the wearer's affiliation with a rifle association.

Opposite page:

This veteran wears a slightly smaller version of the lanyard and the distinctive collar insignia in this period-coloured photograph. He also wears a bayonet on his belt - another important item for the rifleman.

A BSzKRT, HÉV, Autóbusz körzet november havi körzetösszejövedele bizonytalan időre elhalasztódik. Az összejövetelre a bajtársak annakidején meghívót fognak kapni.

After pouring over many issues of the original Magyar Front newspaper, I found a few brief mentions of Frontline Fighters' Association members who worked for the Budapest Transport Company (Budapest Székesfővárosi Közlekedési Részvénytársaság), or BSzKRT. That information lay dormant in the back of my mind until I bought a piece of letterhead (this page, in the background) that clearly came from a special chapter of the veteran's association – that of the BSzKRT and the BHÉV (Budapest Helyiérdekű Vasút, or Budapest Local Interest Railway). So I assumed this might be something special, perhaps similar to the "Gray Taxi" veteran's chapter (see the Spring 2015 issue of the Magyar Front).

Later, another piece of the puzzle came my way in the form of a November 1938 copy of Caesar de Sgardelli's headquarters chapter newsletter, Erzsébetvárosi Frontharcosok Értesítője (see the Fall 2015 issue of the Magyar Front). In it, a thumbnail ad (shown above) mentions the Frontline Fighters' Association BSzKRT and (B)HÉV chapter and includes a hand-drawn facsimile of what I assumed might be their special insignia (a version of the official BSzKRT badge, illustrated below, with the veteran's association emblem in the centre). I immediately went through my collection of photographs, remembering that I had an odd one – an out of focus little snapshot of a uniformed veteran in a visor cap which sported a blurry winged badge of some kind on the upper part of the hat. I wondered if this could be the BSzKRT insignia, but even under the closest scrutiny it was impossible to make it out clearly.

Recently, our own Péter v. Laborc was thumbing through a photo album at a Budapest swap meet, and he noticed a couple of tiny photos which were obviously of Frontline Fighters' Association members. Even better, he thought, as they were wearing the visor caps of the association's Motor Corps. He bought them with me in mind, and they were in my hands in short order.

The photos are tiny – only 6cm x 8cm, but as I looked at them through my look I knew we had found a great treasure.
